From the day that it is known that Kentneky is free from slavery, that day new life and prospective will be infined into her. Paphiation and capital to devel a her rich resources will flow in upon her more rapidly than the most sanguire would calculate.

If any new insegine that the Union is to be restored with slavery they had as well dismiss the idea, and also the expectation of obtaining compensation for slaves. I take fithat all true Union men would gladity give up their slaves for the sake of the Union, and if this be true, there are none others to be considered, for all robels and their sympathizers have ferfeited their right to them. lavery.

I was in Washington in 1850, when the compromise measures were pending, and when it was reared the clavery qui stion would dissolve be Union. We feared the failure of these persures would then break up the Union.

At ha f-rast three o'cl ck a locomotive arived from the east, and the englueer imparted he cheerf I 'nto mation that there would be no rain for the west nutil 12 30 to-day. It ap years that a freight train, loaded with petroonm, had caught fire beyond Lafayette, destroying the ears and a portlon of the track. The road would have to be repaired before a train could pass through the State line. On the receipt of this information, a rush was made for Junction Hotel, and those who, owing to the 1 limbleness of their legs, were fortunate for the talance of the night. MR. LINCOLN'S REMAINS. The train with the remains of the late President on beard, accompanied by Govarnor Bramlette's and Governor Morton's trains, is expected to pass through Lafavette at 3 o'clock on Monday morning. But little preparations have been made for a display in Lafayette. In two hours we hope to again be on the road.

HOW I BUILT MYSELF A HOUSE.

My wife Sopbia, myself, and the beginning of a happy line, formerly lived in the suburbs of Londen, in the sort of house called a Highly-De irable Semi-detached Villa. But in reality our residence was the very opposite to what we wished it to be. We had no room for our friends when they visited us, and were obliged to keep our coals out of doors in a heap against the back-wall. If we managed to equeueze a few acquaintances aronno our table to dinner, there was very great difficulty in serving it; and on such occasions the maid, for want of sideboard noom, would take to putting the dishes in the norm, would take to putting the dishes in the tairs se, or on stooks and chairs lu the passage, o that il anybody clse came after we had sat own, he usually went away again, disgusted at pleasure, and giving the reins to his steed, they soon gaited the ascent. The scene that burst upon them was so grand and imposing that they involuntarily pansed.

It was a splendid landscape. camp life, ir the whirl of battle, surrounded by the beautiful and gay—wherever, in short, he went, the young offier had carried with him the memory of the herrie midden who, at the peril of her own life, had saved him from death. Oh! how he wished that he might once more behold her, if only to thank her anew for his life.

As he was wayed thus by his emotions, he heard a light step, and, looking up, he behold Nelle Randoiph standing before him more beautiful than when he last saw her.

"Miss Randoiph!" ejaculated the Captain.

"Capt. M. rrot!" said Nelle, eagerly advancing, but checking herself as instantly; the stood in beautiful en barrasement.

This remark placed me in some blug of a dillemma, for it must be confessed that I am not given to climbing. The eight of cliffs, roofs, scaticidizes, and elevated places in general, which have no sides to keep people from slipping off, always canses me to feel how juthing was by no me as heigt, and it was but for once, I said I would go u.

A families-removing van carried our furniture and effects to the new boilding without giving us much trouble; but a number of vexing little incidents occurred on our settling down, which I should have felt tuore deeply had not a sort of Mattiumas ennimer of Sophia's luterest in the sifair now set in, and lightened them considerably. Smeke was one of our missures. On lighting the study fle, every particle of smoke came curling into the room. In our fromble we sent for the architect, who immediately asked if we had tried the plan of opening the register to care it. We had not, but we did so, and the smoke ascended at once. The last thing I romember was Sophia jumping up one night and frightening me out of my senses with the exclamation: 'O that builder! Not a single bar of any sort is there to the unreserv-windows. John, some day these poor little children will tumble out in their innocence—how should they know better?—and be dached in picess. Why del you was the property of the second floor?' An agent of the Protestant Bible Association, having made his appearance in the market of the town, began to sell bibles. The customers were rather unmerous and almost all belonged to the class of the trural population. The rector of the parl-h having heard of the fact, hastened to assemble a general meeting of his priests, at which a subscription was made to raise the necessary money for buying up all the bibles the wandering bookseller had not yet disposed of. The bibles, having thus been benght, a large bouther was lignted on the threshold of the church, into which the obnexious books were thrown, in the presence of the rector, who, of curies, bud prepared a aermon for the occasion. But, alast the bibles seller was an old hand; and, as he bad a larger stock of the secred v. time in his vari, he specifily made his appearance in the plazza, at the pan his incess ancw. A second meeting was called at the rectory, but the majority of the private refused to contribute more union, to living that the heretic Protestont would medoutedly return to Galatina with a new collectin of bibles were they to buy up his stock again.
